I can't figure out why this is a problem. I am confused because i'm simply trying to create a map and add 4 keys to it using hashcode(). I tried declaring "key" as String but then it says cannot find symbol Map.containsKey. I am confused. Map MyHashMap = new HashMap(); public void addTable(String key, String num){ MyHashMap.put(key, new Symbol()); } A: Since Java 8, put function expects key as an Object in the map. So you need to change your code to: Map MyHashMap = new HashMap(); public void addTable(String key, String num){ MyHashMap.put(key, new Symbol()); } If you are using Java 7 or below, you need to change the signature of put function to: public void put(Object key, Object value); Before Java 8, a Map is not expected to have a "key". The keys were only represented by strings. So, you need to replace Symbol by String in the code. Furthermore, over recent years, the use of articulated hydraulic cylinders has become widespread, particularly in applications involving heavy lifting and lifting/lowering of tools, equipment and work pieces to high elevations. Typically, an articulated joint is used to interconnect two sections of the cylinder. As can be appreciated, the articulated joint must be fabricated as an integral part of the cylinder to ensure strength and rigidity. In many cases, materials such as Inconel, Ti-6Al-4V, Hastelloy or a nickel alloy are used to fabricate the articulated joint. In addition to fabrication limitations, these materials often undesirably have high density and specific gravity which consequently increases the size and weight of the cylinder. In this regard, it can be appreciated that small, light-weight cylinders are now desirable in many instances. In addition to the weight and volume considerations, articulated joints often utilize a loose ball-nut system which undesirably increases the moment of inertia of the cylinder and thus reduces the speed and efficiency at which the tool, equipment and/or work piece
