ocorticoid receptor variants GR P380S and Ile581Thr: a new search the pathophysiology of the enhanced sensitivity to glucocorticoids in monogenic adult-onset autoimmune diseases. Glucocorticoid receptor variants have been identified in patients suffering from severe adverse effects to glucocorticoid use. However, the vast majority of studies have been done in chronic inflammatory diseases (CID), and have provided indirect evidence on the risk of an increased sensitivity to glucocorticoid use in CID. This study was designed to use direct genotyping of GR variants Ile581Thr and P380S in a sample of patients with CID with a clear disease onset. A sample of 140 patients (46 Crohn's disease, 59 rheumatoid arthritis, and 45 systemic lupus erythematosus) was screened for two GR variants in the ligand-binding domain. Wild-type samples showed a homozygous GR Ile581Thr (GC0/0) and heterozygous P380S (GC0/1) genotype in each disease. Likewise, 100% of our samples had wild-type GR sequence and only 15.7% of them had the GC0/1 genotype. When we calculated the odds ratio of CID in these patients with different genotypes using a multivariate model, we found a significant difference: the odds ratio for CID in patients with GC0/1 compared to those with wild-type GCGR was 19.65 [95% confidence interval (CI) 6.91-56.15]. These new results are consistent with the hypothesis that a genotypic variant in the ligand-binding domain of the GR might increase the risk of disease and complement those previously described for complex traits/polygenic diseases.
