The time now is 39:28.The present invention is generally related to a method and system for transmitting surveillance video images to remote video monitors, and more specifically, to a method and system of transmitting surveillance video images to remote video monitors in order to increase the accuracy of personnel in the field. Conventional video surveillance systems typically include a plurality of video cameras located throughout an area of interest, and a video signal processing system to which the video cameras are connected. The video camera images are typically transmitted to a central surveillance center over a video distribution network. At the central surveillance center, the images are reviewed and are used to determine whether events which have occurred in the area of interest warrant the commencement of a criminal investigation or the issuance of an emergency aid or alarm. In certain applications, the images may be transmitted to a plurality

Trainz: A New Era is designed to work with Steam and.Q: Performance optimizing code (C# - MSSQL) I work in a company that does all their processing through middleware. I have to test the data on one of the servers before it's processed through the middleware and then processed on the servers that actually handle the business. This middleware has about 50 functions/classes that I need to run on the data. The new data is regularly coming through, and it has to be processed from the data coming in (which has to be modified from time to time). I've done this before, with just a few servers, not with 50 functions to run on the data. In that case I got the bulk of the work done on the database server where it would take the data from, do the modification, and send it back. I then copy all the tables to the database server to process. I've also done this with one, and two, but I am pretty sure it's not a good way to do it. The data is going to be sorted, so I need to make sure I have the fastest queries I can have. I started optimizing the bulk of the queries by doing the sort on the database server. I've also made changes to the database. Unfortunately, I can't get these changes to stick. The problem is, that I don't even have the time to make the changes and test them. While I think I've removed most of the slow running functions (doing some tests before and after), I can't seem to find any improvements.
