announced a major shakeup in the running order of matches at next year's World Cup in Japan which will see an entirely new team from North America enter the stage. It has also chosen the new format for the knockout stages of the World Cup, which will feature eight teams separated into four

hosts will play their last match on 24 October, with the remaining quarter-finals on 1, 3 and 6 November. The winner of each of these matches will progress to the semi-finals. It is the first time that three of the four knockout ties of the tournament are not to take place on the same weekend, with the exception of the final on 11 November. The only exception to this is the semi-final involving New Zealand. The new format
