They also took advantage of the fact that one of my new-to-me readers, Dale Wurster, has written a great thing about the stories the agency is trying to tell about the great Northern spotted owls through a great big series of digital photographs. The result is not exactly stunning, but it provides a more humanized version of the vital but often obscure work of modern American conservationists than are often easy to come by. There's a great picture of the owls in their nest, a series of pictures of the workers making this all happen, and a simple web site URL and a link back to the online collection. You can write to the agency and ask them for a hard copy, and they'll tell you what to do.� a city interview, as a few of them in the first series of episodes. That's not necessarily a bad thing though, they are all really good, but I missed Ciarán and Brian's. I've not heard anyone call Ciarán's singer a stiff, Brian's was just that. As for the sound, it does improve, like I said most of the show
